Employment Patterns

Employment levels for the industry are highly sensitive to cyclical changes in the economy because travel volumes are closely tied to economic conditions, both domestically and abroad. Discretionary purchases, such as those on leisure travel, are among the first that consumers scale back on during lean economic times, especially with half of all travel by Canadians being for leisure purposes. Nationally, employment generated by tourism has been on a steady rise for the past two years. With the recent decline though in the number of American visitors and economic uncertainty internationally, tourism employment may suffer in 2008.

Age Profile

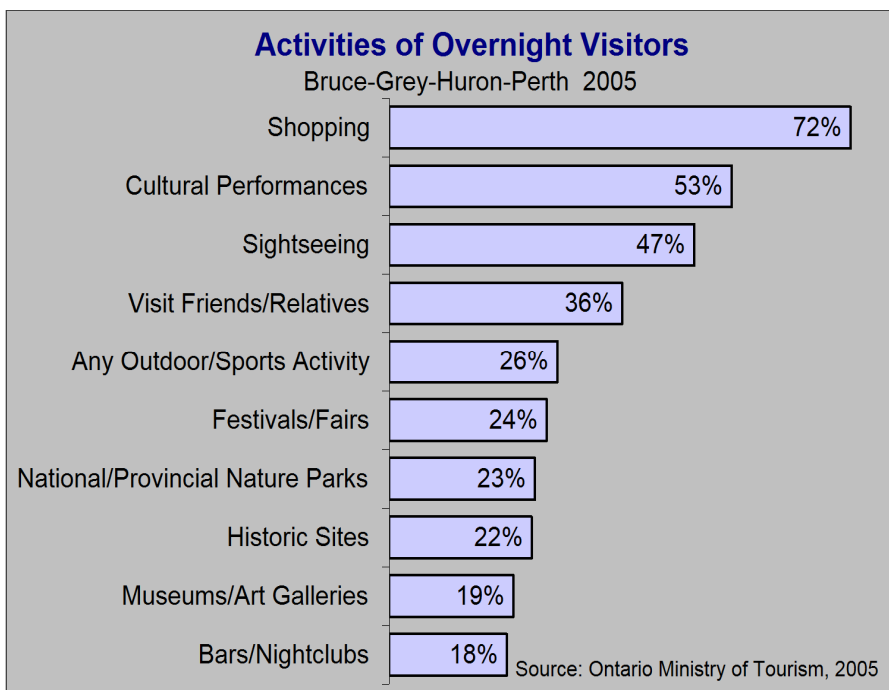

The main distinction in the age composition of the travel counsellor occupation is that the training and experience required for the position leads to the absence of teenage workers. Many young people however find employment as tour guides. These positions are often seasonally orientated and therefore create good positions for students. There is also a larger than normal share of people over age 60 working as tour guides.

Visitors

The number of same day visitors and overnight visitors on pleasure trips to this region has decreased recently. Across Canada, international tourism has slowed so the number of visitors to this area may continue to decline.

Travel Trends

Overnight and same-day car travel from the United States have taken different paths since recording sharp declines at the beginning of 2007. Since February 2007, overnight car travel from the United States has increased 7.6%, with gains in seven of the last nine months. Same-day car travel, however, is down each of the last five months and has fallen 10.2% since February. This suggests that same-day car travel from the United States may be more vulnerable to external factors predominant in 2007, such as the rising cost of gasoline, the uncertainty surrounding the US economy and the faltering US greenback. Travel from overseas countries reached its highest level in over three years in November, as residents of countries other than the United States made 401,000 trips to Canada, up 4.6% from October.
